Committee completes recreation and culture plan

BY KEVIN VINK
 MVP Staff

The Town of Didsbury completed the Recreation and Culture Master Plan recently and it was accepted in council as information only during the meeting on Sept. 24, say officials.

Efforts to compile the plan started back in January this year and through the work of various individuals who volunteered to sit on a committee, the long-term plan for recreation and culture will be reviewed by the new council at its strategic plan meeting in November.

Nicole Aasen, manager of community services, who acted as a liaison between town administration and the committee, said the plan was compiled through a process involving getting input from both the committee and residents at large.

"There were six town of Didsbury residents as well as three Mountain View County residents that took part in the process and they had been selected based on demographics and their involvement within the community," said Aasen.

The committee started meeting in January and developed a community questionnaire that was used to survey residents around town and at various events.

"They met and discussed with different community groups. They had (the survey) online and our Facebook and all different kinds of communication avenues to try to reach as many people as possible," she noted.

Based on the feedback they had received on that survey - with over 180 responses - the committee developed priorities to recommend to council regarding recreation and culture, ranging from now to about 20 years down the road, she said.

"They brought forward 14 main priorities that range from everything from development of a community garden on the old lawn bowling greens site, to the building of a new library that would be more of a multi-use building that could see art space and meeting rooms, those kinds of things being incorporated into the building.

"They're also recommending a lot of upgrades and extensions to the Didsbury pathway plan, and they want to see building condition assessments done on all of our major recreational facilities - similar to the one that had been done on the pool last fall."

These assessments will allow officials to know exactly what condition town facilities are in and also what kinds of upgrades and maintenance will be needed in the future, she added.

"The committee also recommended improvements to sports fields in town, and a new skate park to be built within the next eight years, as well as a long-term plan around the arena and whether it should be retrofitted or have new construction in the next 10 to 20 years."

Mayor Brian Wittal said council is pleased with the plan because many of the priorities that the committee found to be of concern to residents matched what council had already been talking about.

"After having reviewed that, it's very much in line with the discussions that I know council had over at least the last six years - if not nine years - that I've been on council, of what we believe some of the priorities are from a recreation and cultural perspective in Didsbury," said Wittal.

He noted everything from the library to the museum to parks in the area contribute to the culture and recreation, and having a plan for the future is important.

"I believe we all had the right focus and we all pretty much came up with what we felt were the top priorities," he added.

"Maybe not all ranked the same but we all had that list, so I think it showed that everybody at all levels, from council to the committee to residents, are definitely in agreement with what it is they would like to see as far as future plans for culture and recreation facilities in our community."

Now that there is a document that includes cost estimates, demographics, and priorities, councils up to 20 years down the road will be able to refer to it and decide what their best course of action is, according to what residents would like to see.

He noted some items, like the community garden, would not be expensive to do, and that many people would be interested in participating in something like that.

"All the way to new recreation facilities that could be $20 million, down the road. So there's quite a variation in what these projects are, but at least now we have more meat on the bone for discussion and to try to make some decisions as to how we're going to prioritize or finance these projects and how we're going to fit them in the future."

Crossing guard volunteers needed at schools

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

Ross Ford Elementary and Westglen schools' principals are asking for the public's assistance in providing crossing guards to patrol the four-way stop on 23rd Street and 20th Avenue, say officials.

The mornings are a little less congested for foot traffic, but Westglen principal Carolyn Massel said there are hundreds of students funnelling out of both schools at about the same time in the afternoons, which can impede vehicle traffic in the area.

With parents picking up and dropping off children, she said that getting some crossing guards out there would improve traffic flow, but also improve safety as well.

"I think when we have crossing guards there, they just sharpen people's awareness. It makes them extra-vigilant when they're travelling through that area - it's that extra 'aha'," said Massel.

"I think it's always beneficial having an extra set of eyes and ears and an extra set of supervision out there."

Though she doesn't think it's a safety concern, she noted that it is a volume concern, because when nobody is controlling the number of students who can cross and when, it can lead to snags in traffic.

"Last year we were able to provide crossing guards both before and after school," she said, noting that budget cuts have not allowed either school to do so this year.

"When I had to choose between teachers supervising crosswalks and helping children with their learning, the learning always comes first," she added.

She and Brent Runnett, principal of Ross Ford Elementary, are hoping that some parents or members of the community at large will sign up to take over patrol duties to enhance both safety and traffic flow in the area.

"If I partnered myself with three other friends, we could take Tuesdays, so each of us would be responsible for patrolling one Tuesday a month," she said, noting that with enough volunteers, the workload would be light.

"I think there's ways to do it, and I think it's asking a lot, finding someone to volunteer every morning and every night. I think we could figure out ways to be flexible with scheduling, and the training can be covered in about a half hour."

The guards are usually there at about 3:10 p.m. and are finished by 3:20 p.m., and in the morning the duties generally last from 8:15 a.m. to 8:40 a.m., she said.

"We have no expectation that somebody's going to step up and do five days a week.

"That's asking a lot of people, but we would be happy to work with anybody who can spare some time."

Those who are interested in getting involved are encouraged to call either Westglen School at 403-335-3700 or Ross Ford Elementary School at 403-335-3234.

Steer disqualification upheld following appeal

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

The Calgary Stampede has upheld its decision to disqualify Riley Chalack and Royden Anderson's champion steer, following an appeal of the decision to take away the title after blood tests came back positive for ibuprofen and Flunixin, say officials.

The Stampede's Agriculture Review Panel reviewed the matter and agreed with the original disqualification. The panel, comprised of a group of knowledgeable individuals that had no part in the original decision, cited that the competition's rules were explicit and clear, according to a press release from the Calgary Stampede.

The release stated that the panel found the drug testing protocols were valid and that the blood tests did indeed reveal the presence of the two substances, and that proper authorities were exercised by the Stampede in the rendering of the disqualification.

"The rules of the event itself are essentially zero tolerance, so we want to run a clean, drug-free competition," said Kurt Kadatz, communications director for the Stampede.

Though the amounts found were minute, he noted that the presence of the anti-inflammatory pharmaceuticals is what the officials were concerned about and not the amount.

"It's kind of like where people would have a breathalyzer test, and we could get in a discussion as to whether it was .07 or .08. There is no tolerance for any presence of drugs in this particular competition, so it's an easier question," he added.

After following up through both an appeal as well as getting opinions from experts in the U of C faculty of veterinary medicine, officials were "very comfortable that (they) made the right decision," he said.

He noted that some people have said there was a conflict of interest in this competition, as the son of Don Miller, chair of the UFA Steer Classic Competition, had competed in the event, but added that Miller's son participated in the junior division.

"I know being disqualified is not a popular decision for those who are affected, but the Stampede wants to run a clean, drug-free competition. It's what the community expects."

Royden Anderson still does not agree with the decision, because the drugs were not given to the steer at the competition, and did not violate the rule against altering the appearance or performance of the steer because the amounts found were so low.

"Nobody broke the rules, nobody broke the law," said Anderson.

"The steer was totally slaughterable that day," he said, alluding to the fact that steers are slaughtered for their meat following the competition, and that any pharmaceuticals in the animals have to adhere to strict laws.

"The kangaroo court turned out to be the kangaroo court like we thought it would be," he added.

"What really bothered me was that we had to present our evidence and they didn't have to present theirs. So they knew everything we were bringing but they wouldn't bring any of theirs."

He explained that the flunixin, also known as Banamine, was likely left over from when the steer was shipped up from the U.S., as those transporting the steer would have administered it so it wasn't uncomfortable during the ride.

And the amount of ibuprofen in the steer's blood was equivalent to the amount that would have transferred if a person had just taken an Advil, then handled the steer's mouth, he said.

"Nothing was done wrong. The steer's appearance wasn't altered and no drugs were given to the steer at the show - they just found drugs that were given in the past - and that's what they disqualified the steer on. How ridiculous.

"We had the number 1 (veterinary medicine doctor) in North America and they didn't even listen to her. They disagreed with her. She's the one that decides whether an animal will be good for the food chain and they didn't listen to her."

Didsbury man arrested on drug trafficking charges

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

A Didsbury man was arrested on drug-related charges following the execution of a search warrant by Didsbury RCMP, according to Sgt. Jeff Jacobson. "As a detachment, we're pleased to have an impact on the drug trade in Didsbury and feel that this seizure is significant for a community this size," said Jacobson.

Over $11,000 worth of drugs, mainly cocaine and crack cocaine, were seized following the search of a vehicle that he was operating, with 87 grams overall of crack cocaine and cocaine being seized, along with a small quantity of marijuana, he said.

The arrest was made in the Calgary area, but the search warrant was executed in Didsbury on Monday, Sept. 23, he noted.

Following a several-month-long investigation, and with assistance of the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Team (ALERT), John Edward Vickers, a 29-year-old, was apprehended following a vehicle search, he said.

Vickers has been charged with possession of cocaine for the purpose of trafficking, possession of crack cocaine for purpose of trafficking, possession of marijuana, possession of cocaine, and possession of a prohibited weapon, namely a butterfly knife, said Jacobson.

The accused was subsequently released on strict conditions, and will be appearing in court in Calgary in Oct. 9, he noted.

"Without speaking specifically to this case, typically people charged with such crimes would be released on conditions like curfews during evening hours, not possessing cellphones or pagers, not being in motor vehicles unless registered owner of that vehicle present, and of course not being in possession of controlled substances."

One of the priorities for the Didsbury RCMP is to continue targeting those trafficking drugs in the area, and they will continue to focus on that priority, he added.

Those kinds of investigations can take a significant amount of time, but because of the help of ALERT, that time was significantly cut down, he noted.

Opinion

Editorial

Health care remains top issue

Although the next provincial election is still three years away, the Redford Tories will need to start doing a much better job overseeing and running the province's health-care system – or face public backlash now and consequences at the polls in 2016.

DAN SINGLETON

As one of the top public services provided to taxpayers, health care is, and promises to remain, of great interest to every Albertan. It is, after all, the province's most expensive department, costing millions of dollars every month.

Yet in light of the latest shakeup of the system, Albertans could perhaps be forgiven for thinking that the ruling PCs may not have a very good handle on health care these days.

Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills Wildrose MLA Bruce Rowe echoed what many Albertans may be thinking when he recently gave the health-care leadership a failing grade.

"A review of Alberta Health Services (AHS) governance echoed what Albertans have been saying since the superboard was created: AHS' structure is too centralized, confusing for taxpayers and community leaders alike, unaccountable, and underperforming," said Rowe.

"Last month the Redford government pronounced – after much study and consternation – that AHS is not, in fact, perfect. Understated and long overdue, the admission was at least a head fake in the right direction.

"The first step to tackling any difficulty is recognizing that a problem exists."

Health Minister Fred Horne recently announced the latest reorganization of AHS, changes that will see 80 vice-president positions reduced to 10, and the health authority's five geographic zones reduced to two.

The changes, however, do not include the elimination of the province's superboard.

Unfortunately for rural Alberta, the latest shakeup may not necessarily equate to reduced wait times or better overall access to health-care services.

There used to be more than 200 health boards in Alberta, giving many rural communities hands-on input into the health care of their residents.

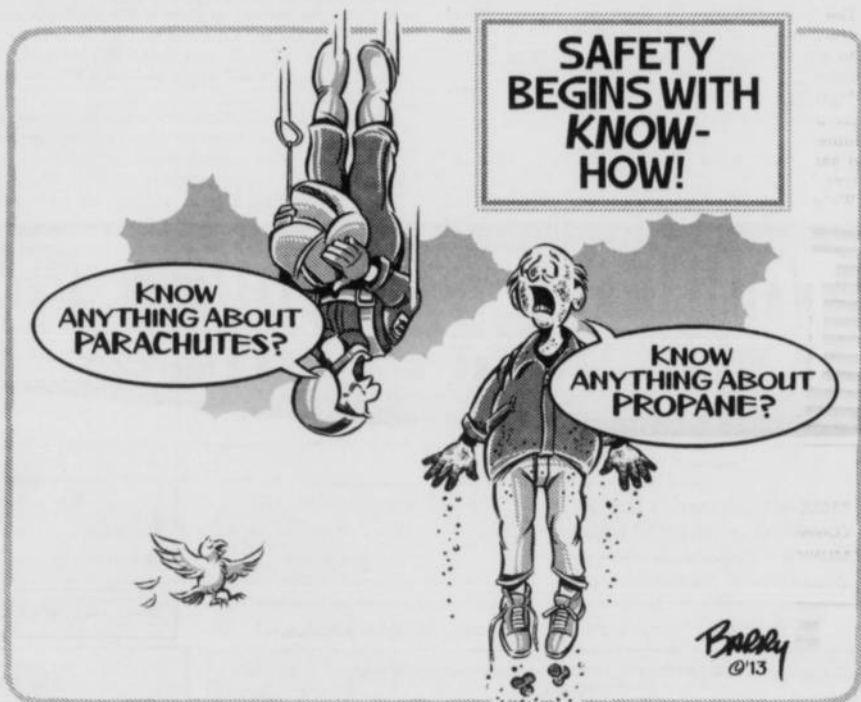

Those boards were then consolidated into 17 boards, and then nine, and now one superboard.

Whether this dramatic centralization of health care has led to better overall health services for Albertans remains an open question – as does the question of whether this latest shakeup will lead to improvements or just more of the same.

What is known is that despite millions and millions of taxpayers' dollars spent on health care every month, long lineups, lengthy wait times and other problems continue to plague the system.

Health Minister Horne would like residents to believe that this latest shakeup will lead to real improvements.

Unfortunately that is exactly the same message the long line of his predecessors has been sending over the past decade.

Commentary

Who is responsible for Syria?

BY YULE SCHMIDT

Syrian Reconciliation Minister AliHaidar has every reason to be pleased with the disarmament deal his country reached in Geneva over the weekend. As he put it, the deal "helps avoid [a] war against Syria [by] depriving those who wanted to launch it of arguments to do so."

He's right. Chemical weapons spurred talk of intervening in Syria because many countries considered the unanswered use of such weapons as a threat to national security. Neutralizing that threat removed the urgency of intervention, which, for much of the world, was a relief. For Syrians, it was a letdown. The deal will do little to end the war and save Syrian lives; it will only restrict the means by which they are lost.

The world has never quite figured out how to deal with civil wars like Syria's because death and destruction within one country ultimately do not affect the national interests of another. Syria is like Rwanda, Bosnia, and Darfur. The main interests at stake in a civil war are those of endangered civilians.

But who is responsible for protecting citizens when it is their own state from which they need protection?

The unfortunate answer is, no one.

The responsibility to intervene in such cases should presumably fall to the United Nations, but that organization is paralyzed by its own structure. The Security Council is responsible for interventions, yet its five permanent members all have differing interests and can each use veto power to pursue them. Russia has been particularly obstinate on Syria given its alliance to the Syrian government. However, because it has operated within the legal framework of the UN, its actions are technically legitimate.

Still, Franklin Roosevelt never envisioned legal legitimacy to trump morality in UN decision-making. He pictured the UN as the world's moral defender of human rights, not just as a forum for debate or a court of international law.

There should be consequences for members who ignore or contravene the UN's principles, but the reality of the organization's makeup precludes this option: the UN cannot enforce its principles nor make moral decisions because it cannot claim one moral code to be the "right" one without discrediting all the others.

This inability to unite its members around shared ideals has hampered the UN's effectiveness since the beginning and continues to hamper it on Syria.

The 193 members in the UN today represent an even greater diversity of cultures and creeds that do not necessarily share Roosevelt's decidedly Western understanding of human rights, much less his belief that the UN has a moral responsibility to defend them.

The UN thus relies on legal rationale and dodges moral crises like Syria because it is simply too hard to find a moral code upon which the entire world can agree.

There is no easy solution to Syria, nor would intervention guarantee peace. But there is a disconnect between the world's muted disapproval of the act of killing civilians and its loud outrage over the manner in which it is done. Somehow in this web of international conventions and competing interests, the moral truth has been lost that a child dying by mortar is no less tragic than one dying by sarin.

U.S. President Barack Obama asked recently what message should be sent to a dictator who gasses children and pays no price. I wonder what message has been sent to the many dictators who have killed their people and paid no price because they used guns.

Council awards scholarships to summer workers

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

The Town of Didsbury awarded a total of $7,000 in scholarships during the council meeting on Sept. 24 to students who came to work for the town this summer.

Mayor Brian Wittal explained that the town has been awarding scholarships to students every summer following their successful employment and said there are a few reasons behind the initiative.

"We've done it for quite a while as part of an incentive for our summer students," said Wittal, noting that if students come back the following year, the scholarship increases proportionally.

"I guess we looked at it as if the students come and they're good workers and everything else, they'll reapply the next year, and that's the incentive for them to come back and apply and want to work with us for the next summer."

Also, because it entices students to come back year after year, the town can save money and time because they don't need training, because they already have the experience they need.

"(Council) felt it's a good way to help us to build a temporary workforce and help them build towards their education in the future by providing this as an incentive. We don't pay the highest wage around, but it's also a little bonus for them at the end of the day that they see as important."

CAO Roy Brown noted in council that this was "the best summer we've ever had as far as summer students" and noted that the town has received compliments on both the work done with the Didsbury Out of School Care Association (DOSCA) and the improvements to parks.

"We had some outstanding students this year who really made the town a better place to live."

Readers Digest fraud

Sometime during the day on Sept. 18, a resident received a letter from a company indicating that the resident had winnings to collect, "and all they had to do was send a money order of $5,000 and not tell anybody," said Sgt. Jeff Jacobson.

The individual did fill out a money order and was in the process of depositing it with Canada Post, but spoke with a relative shortly after, who was quick to inform them that it was a scam, and the resident was able to recall the deposit in time, he said.

"In this case, we want to remind people that if you win something (in Canada), you never have to pay money to claim a prize, and to be careful if people are wanting you to send them money out of the blue."

County B&E

Alarms went off in a business located in the county, after a window was broken, said Jacobson.

The incident occurred on Sept. 22, just before 1 a.m., but nothing was taken or damaged other than the window, and the audible alarm likely frightened off the suspect or suspects.

Mailbox mischief

Following multiple mailbox vandalism, police are asking people to be on the lookout for suspicious activity near their mailboxes. Two weeks ago, mailboxes on Westcott Road were tipped, and last week, a mailbox on Twp. Rd. 310 and Rge. Rd. 21 was also tipped over, said Jacobson.

"Generally, county residents know their neighbours, so if they see anybody who's suspicious we'll stop in and see what they're up to," he said.

Golf clubs stolen

A set of golf clubs was taken from a vehicle parked in Rosebud Estates between Sept. 14 and 16, according to Cpl. Clint Gulash.

The car was not damaged, and the resident reported that the doors had been left unlocked.

He reaffirmed that residents need to lock their vehicles at all times.

Truck vandalized

A truck that was parked on the 1300 block of 21st Street had oil and paint remover poured on it from the grill to the back of the truck on the driver's side overnight on Sept. 25, said Gulash.

"It's probably going to damage the paint and I don't know if it needs a new paint job or not."

He said it seems like it may have been targeted, but is hoping that anybody who may have seen the incident will call police or Crime Stoppers.

Golf tournament benefiting junior golf program

Gil's Truck and Auto hosted tournament that had 70 golfers turn out

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

The third annual Gil's Truck and Auto golf tournament raised $600 more than last year, with $1,400 being raised and going directly into the Didsbury Golf Club's junior golf program, say officials.

Jason Enns, who organized the tournament with Chris Clazie, said about 70 golfers came out to play on Saturday, Sept. 21.

"We're really happy with that turnout. That worked out well," said Enns.

There were about 80 attendees in total that were involved, as well as the grounds crew and staff.

The first year of the tournament, it was a customer appreciation golf tournament and the company paid for most of it. The small amount of proceeds they were left with got donated to the junior golf program, he said.

"Because of the fact there was no junior golf at the time, so that's what started it. And then the second year, we made it not a customer appreciation, we made it more of an open thing for whoever wanted to get into it."

They chose to donate towards a junior golf program, because the first year the tournament took place, there was no such program and organizers wanted to see one become a reality.

"This time, we made up letters saying everything was going to junior golf. We kind of hit it a little harder this year, so that's why I think we did so much better," he added.

He noted the junior golfers are going to help keep the course running as they grow up and really get into the sport, so it's a good cause to help.

For example, proceeds from the previous tournaments went towards the purchase of golf clubs for the juniors to rent, and the year-end windup party was also paid for.

"We're kind of still deciding how this chunk of money will get distributed, but I know it all goes towards junior golf somehow."

The main sources of the money raised at the tournament are raffles and score advantages, where competitors can better their scores depending on how many advantage items they buy.

"That's pretty decent to have 70 people come up and spend $1,300 or $1,400 on that stuff," he added.

"We kind of hit it a little harder this year, so that's why I think we did so much better."

Didsbury hosts Sr. girls' volleyball tournament

KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

Ten girls' senior high volleyball teams came to play in Didsbury last Friday and Saturday, September 27 and 28, and Didsbury High School's athletics director Ian Bates says the tournament went well.

"Overall it went very well," said Bates. "We had probably four of the top 2A teams in the province come down and it was very competitive with a lot of high-calibre volleyball.

He added he thinks all who attended were impressed by the school's ability to bring so many high-level teams together under one roof.

The placements for the round robin tournament are as follows: Vauxhall placed first, Ardrossan second, Magrath third, Strathcona-Tweedsmuir fourth, Vegreville fifth, Picture Butte sixth, Three Hills seventh, Prairie Christian Academy eighth, Acme ninth, and Didsbury placed 10th.

Despite taking 10th place, Bates said Didsbury was making a focus on technique.

"They knew from the onset that a lot of the teams were going to be better, but their main goal throughout the tournament was basically work on simple things of systems, switches hitting and basically get down their game plan," he said.

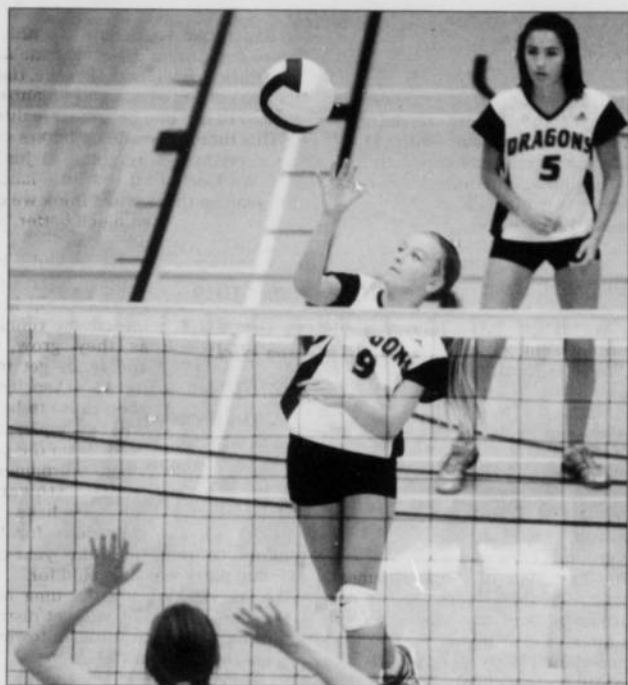

"Even though they didn't obviously execute it all that great, but it's still early in the season, they just wanted to get all the repetitions in."

They knew they were in for some tough games and did come close to winning a few, he noted.

The tournament was made possible through the efforts of many volunteers and organizations around town and he added it was because of them the tournament was such a success.

"It was a huge undertaking with the teams and basically the volunteers and donations really helped make this tournament turn out the way it did."

Anthony's art heading west for Art Crawl

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

Local stained glass and recycled computer artist Bill Anthony will have his art displayed in the China Cloud Gallery in Vancouver this November as part of the Culture Crawl, an annual three-day event on the east side of the city.

Anthony got the connection through one of the band members who works on Paul Anthony's Talent Time, which is a show hosted by his son, he says, noting that Vancouver could be a great market for his work.

Of course all art is unique to the artist, but Anthony's style is especially so, due to both how he uses stained glass and his approach to using recycled computer parts.

"I've got a number of people who come regularly to me and ask 'what's new?'" says Anthony.

"I'm always experimenting. With the type of art I do, it's important that you experiment and advance to create new pieces all the time – you can get stale very quickly in the visual arts area."

He has a number of customers who are art collectors and are always looking for his new and cutting-edge pieces, because they know he is always trying different things, he adds.

"They know when they come to my shop, they're going to find something new every time they walk in, because I'm always experimenting with new techniques and materials and new ideas."

For example, one recent custom job he did was for a Calgary Chamber of Commerce-related association called Be Local, in which he made up awards for one of their events.

He combined computer parts and other recycled goods to create the association's logo – a bee – with a base of reclaimed wood, supplied by local woodworker Lody Van Den Berk.

Showcasing in Vancouver will help open up a completely new market for him, he notes.

"First of all my prices are going to almost double – for two reasons. Galleries take 40 per cent of the actual sale price, plus I know in Vancouver, my art will sell for a lot more than what I'm charging for here," he says.

"And often what happens is when one gallery picks it up, another gallery will want to include your work."

By getting his art into Vancouver, he will be getting a much wider audience than he can get here in town, he adds.

"A bigger scope is obviously going to improve business, but it's always nice to see someone's interested in what you're doing, too."

One of the biggest challenges is getting people to buy his art, he says, noting all artists struggle with marketing their work.

"I firmly believe – and I actually have done some presentations on marketing art – that it's important for artists to know that they will only reach one-half of one per cent (of people) who will have any understanding or appreciation of what they do," he says.

"Many people will walk by and say 'I love it, I love it," but really to appreciate art, you need to buy it, collect it, and enjoy it."

This is why, although he is based in Didsbury, he tries to get as much exposure to the world as possible, especially by attending art shows where attendees are specifically interested in buying art and finding new artists.

It may not be easy, but it definitely helps that he does two completely different kinds of art – stained glass and work based on recycled computer parts – and often combines them to make something completely different, he says.

"So sometimes I'm not sure what people are interested in, so I just have to throw everything out there and let people decide what it is they like."

"But I don't just do one form or one type of glass-work – I try to be creative and combine the two art forms together, and as far as I know, I'm the only person in the world who is doing what I'm doing with recycled materials."

Bill Anthony displays some of the many pieces of art that he creates at his shop in town. He recently got a request to display his work in Vancouver during the annual Art Crawl event.

Lions club stocking up food bank

BY KEVIN VINK
MVP Staff

The Didsbury Lions Club's annual food drive, benefiting the Mountain View Food Bank didn't work out quite as well as last year, but officials are still happy to be donating 4,572 pounds of food and $650.

Vance van Dam, who spearheaded the operation, said there were a couple of members who arrived late, and there were also 23 Westglenn students who came to help.

"We didn't have quite as much help," said van Dam. "That hurt us a little, but that was one less student per vehicle. Overall it went great and the kids were great."

The Lions have been holding the food drive for about 20 years, he noted, adding that they should be able to annually pull in enough to help stock up the food bank if the community keeps supporting them.

Having the extra stock can really help the food bank, especially coming into the fall and winter, he noted.

"And sometimes (people) just need a little help, so they'll get a food order one or two times until they get back on their feet or get a paycheck," he said.

"It's good to just have lots of food on hand at the food bank, then they're prepared for whatever the case may be."

He added that food bank officials also like receiving cash donations, because it allows them to pick up whatever goods they need to stock up on.
